

Nate Haley has been passionate for the saxophone from an early age, and has spent over two decades delighting audiences throughout Northern California. His dedication to the arts has led him to perform with several ensembles like the Sierra Nevada Winds, the Auburn Symphony, and various small theater programs throughout the Sacramento region. He was also a founding performer for the Golden State Wind Orchestra, collaborating with some of the area's most talented wind musicians for several seasons.

Beyond large ensembles, Nate has also collaborated with many smaller chamber groups, performing along the West Coast, from Los Angeles, to Ashland, Oregon, in addition to the greater Sacramento area. He has also had the privilege of performing at the annual Festival of New American Music held at California State University, Sacramento.

Nate Haley studied music at Sacramento State, where he was a member of the Sacramento State Wind Ensemble under the guidance of Dr. Robert Halseth. During his time there, he had the opportunity to expand his studies via clinics and masterclasses with guest musicians and composers. Additionally, he has performed under the baton of guest conductors such as Dr. Frank Ticheli, and has appeared in notable venues such as Mandavi Center's Jackson Hall. While studying under saxophonist Dr. Keith Bohm, Nate earned a B.S. degree in Business and Finance from California State University, Sacramento, while also obtaining a minor in music.
